

Dr. Khyati Y. Joshi

Khyati Y. Joshi is a public intellectual whose social science research and community connections inform policy-makers, educators, and everyday people about race, religion, and immigration in 21st century America. She is the author and co-editor of Teaching for Diversity and Social Justice, 3rd edition (Routledge, 2016); New Roots in America's Sacred Ground: Religion, Race, and Ethnicity in Indian America (Rutgers U. Press, 2006); Asian Americans in Dixie: Race and Migration in the South (U. of Illinois Press, 2013); and numerous book chapters and articles. She has lectured around the world, including at the White House; to policy-makers at the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE); and for university and popular audiences in Denmark, India, Lebanon, and across the United States. She consults on equity and inclusion for schools, colleges and universities, nonprofit organizations, and businesses; she has provided professional development to educators across the U.S., continuing education programs for lawyers and judges. As a Professor of Education at Fairleigh Dickinson University, Dr. Joshi received the 2014 Distinguished Faculty Award for Research and Scholarship. She was a consultant for the Pew Research Forum's groundbreaking 2015 survey on Asian Americans and Religion. Professor Joshi earned her doctorate in Social Justice Education at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst. She is a graduate of Emory University and pursued post-graduate studies at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. Often contacted by journalists, Prof. Joshi has appeared on television and radio such as C-Span, Voice of America, PRI's The World and Danish Public Radio, and has been quoted in numerous publications in the U.S. and abroad, including the New York Times, the Wall Street Journal, the Washington Post, the Boston Globe, The Times of India, and The Record.
